Amanda Zuretti Moderated “Power Generation: Current and Future Sources” Panel at Worcester Business Journal’s Massachusetts Energy Summit

A combination of state and federal incentives are helping businesses lower the ROI on energy efficiency projects and other efforts to become more green. The annual Massachusetts Energy Summit, produced by the Worcester Business Journal in partnership with National Grid, informed businesses, nonprofits, municipalities and consumers about their energy options.

At the June 18 conference, Amanda Zuretti moderated the panel “Power Generation: Current and Future Sources,” which highlighted how to harness market innovation and technologies for a greener transformation. Topics of discussion included current energy generators, the state’s renewable goals, incentives to increase renewables, and obstacles and challenges to these initiatives.
